

IMAGINING NEW COMMUNITIES

Dear Saints:

If we are truly living in the last days and people will be flowing to the Center Place, there may be a need for expanding housing stock in sustainable communities as part of the Zionics endeavor. To spark our imagination about some of the ways this could be accomplished with new technologies, a free presentation will be held at the

Central/Gospel Park Branch
919 S. Delaware, Independence, MO
Sunday, Oct. 14, at 1 p.m.

A company from the state of Washington has agreed to come and display some of the latest technology in home construction and intentional community living. 3-D printed homes -- constructed with vastly improved speed, materials and methods -- will be highlighted in their presentation, along with information on new energy technologies and sustainable off-grid living including food production and cooperative enterprises.

The company is named Envirock (the website can be found at envirock.net). We have asked them to come, not as an endorsement of their specific company, but as a way to begin to help us think about possibilities for the future. An excerpt from their site reads:

“What if high quality, deep green homes were affordable?

What if your home provided for your most expensive and fundamental living needs through integrated critical life support systems that produce abundant clean energy, natural/organic food and clean water?

What if your home required little to no life cycle maintenance because it was built from green, recyclable materials so strong and durable it could last millenniums?

What would that mean to you and your family?

Imagine the creative, spiritual, educational and economic impact that would have on our lives.”

The U. S. National Conference is sponsoring this free presentation, and we’re inviting anyone who would be interested to come. There will be a 90-minute presentation followed by up to an hour for questions and further conversation. The guests will stay as long as people are interested in sharing.

We hope you will come share the afternoon with us.

Joel Loving

US National Conference President

Joint Conference of Restoration Branches